I've conducted an initial analysis of our music listening data, and some interesting trends are emerging. Notably, 2020 saw the highest average daily listening time at 4.6k minutes. This peak coincides with the onset of the pandemic, which likely contributed to increased time spent indoors and thus potentially more music consumption.

Furthermore, our data reveals that Friday is the most popular day for music listening, with a remarkable 9203 minutes listened to on Fridays throughout 2021. This suggests a strong association between the end of the workweek and increased engagement with music.
